The Next Generation Manufacturing (NGM) Skilled Training Program is a partnership with the SFMADE, Humanmade, Young Community Developers, and the Office of Employment and Workforce Development. Next Generation Manufacturing is an industry on the rise in the City of San Francisco. The NGM Skilled Training Program aims to place residents of San Francisco with little to no experience in advanced manufacturing, including members of our most underserved communities, into an advanced manufacturing training program that will give participants the skills and experience required to pursue life-changing careers and provide for long-term employment.

The course will be teach eligible interested individuals how to write code using computer aided design software. Once you've learned this computer language you will use that knowledge to operate either a 3D printer or a computer numeric control machine (CNC Machining). The 3D printing course will be held in the evening from 5 pm-9 pm and has a capacity of 14 participants. The CNC machining course will take place from 10:30 am-3:30 pm, and has a capacity of 6 students. Due to limited capacity in this in demand field applicants must fulfill certain requirements

- 6th grade math skills
- Be able to turn on and operate a desktop computer
- Able to effectively send and receive emails.

The NGM Skilled Training Program consists of 12 weeks of soft skills and advanced manufacturing hard skills training followed by Job Placement Assistance by YCD and SFMADE or the possibility of 3-months subsidy employment (32 hours/week) leading to unsubsidized employment.
